CREW AND PASSENGER TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS." DEAR Sin. - I was to-day reading over your mail supplement of March 5th and onne no ord an abstract from the Poking Gazette which amused me immensely. It was a report submitted to the Throne respecting the services randered by Lioutenant Wei Chen Sliong in connection with the wrock of the British steamer Paladin, on the Paradels, in October, 1832. It is typically Chinese, and to put it mildly a series of inacou racies from beginning to end: To begin with, Wei Chen Shong was not in command of the gunbout Suitsing at the time of the occurrence; he was probably what we then termed the First Mandarin, two officials being attached to the gunboat to transact business with the officials on shore, and convey sailing orders to the captain, who at that time was Capt. Caller, at present. I believe, harbour master at Port Arthur. The Suitsing was lying at a place called Samah when we received news that some ship-wrecked people had fan jed so ne miles down the cons Gaaloong Bay, and if possible further up the to have been the Palastin, lost on the Paracels) I On the way round to Gaaloong Bay we experiunced protty bad weather, but on arriving there were fortugate in finding two boats with some other boats' oraws, which he did, and returned with captain, chief officer, and rest of arew and passengers the f llowing day. There were in all six Europeans—captain, chief and second officers, chief, second, and third engineers—the rest of the craw, who were Chinese, and some thirty old Chinese presengers. We had all these people on board for some days and eventually landed Mandariu, who I take to be the valiant Lieutenant Wei Chen Sheng of the memorial, was in great distress about having to pay for victuals for the Chinese crew and passengers. The foreigners were provided for by the captain foreign officers, and engineers of the Suitsing. The gallant Wei Chen heng remained at Samah who the Suitsing left, on her errand of morey, to await her return; he has evidently now value. > THRILLING EXPERIENCE OF THI REV. J. PARKER.

HIS ESCAPE FROM THE REBELS. The Chinese Recorder publishes a long account by the Rev. J. Parker, who was at Chao-vang when the rebellion broke out, of his escape from the rebels and his thrilling experience. The alarm of the approach of the robbers, or rebels, was given on the night of the 12th November, but Mr. Parker did not credit the reports sufficiently to leave at once. The 13th was passed in a state of painful uncortainty, and at day break on the 14th the word was given that the robbers had come.
